

Abstract: The paper presents an analysis of the major problems of the Portuguese higher education system that has gone through a period of very fast expansion without strong state regulation, which led to a crisis due to the recent decrease of the number of candidates to HE. The crisis has resulted in attacks on institutional autonomy, the academic drift of polytechnics, the questioning of the governance mechanisms of HEIs and increased state interference.